Arabic coffee dates back to 15th Century, when the first trees were discovered in Yemen's Sufi monasteries. Traditionally boiled over long periods of time with cardamom to produce a deep, dark and bitter drink. We choose to gently infuse the spice with Dear Green Brazil blend coffee beans in a French Press, creating an altogether more delicate and complex coffee with subtle notes of cardamom and date.

ALLERGENS & INGREDIENTS

Za'atar: a balanced blend of herbs and spices that contains sesame.

Labneh: a Middle Eastern soft cheese made from strained yoghurt.

Aquafaba is chickpea water and is used for texture rather than flavour: a vegetarian alternative to using egg white if you like, meaning that vegetarians can also partake in the joys of frothy, silky sours.

Extra virgin olive oil (e.v.o.o.) is the natural juice squeezed from the olives one day after harvest without using heat or chemicals during the extraction process, making it the highest grade of unrefined and unprocessed olive oil. For our olive oil negroni we sous-vide the ingredients with the oil at 55C for three hours before freezing off the oil. This results in a negroni with a rich, oily texture and a hint of olive without having oil floating in the drink.

Our sesame vodka and gin are made in a similar way: the spirits are sous-vided with tahini (a Middle Eastern condiment made from ground sesame seeds) and a pinch of fennel seed, providing nutty and viscose spirits.

Our purées also make use of the sous-vide, allowing us to trap the vivid and subtle nuances of a selection of fresh herbs and spices.

Before being carbonated in-house, our soda and limeade are 'cold brewed' (macerated at an ambient temperature for a long period of time), which - like sous-viding - allows for non-aggressive extraction of delicate flavours from our herbs and spices.

Persian white limes are limes that have been soaked in brine before being slowly dried in the sun. They develop delicate and complex citrus notes not found in fresh lime, and as a result are typically used in slow cooked dishes.

Preserved lemons are fresh lemons which have been infused for a long period of time in brine and mixed spices, meaning whilst they lose their sharpness their citrus characteristics are intensified. We use a tiny little bit of the salty water to add depth and complexity to our limeade, but you will find our chefs also using the lemons themselves in the food.

Ras-el-hanout; which translates as 'top of the shop'; is a signature blend of spices from a particular spice seller. It represents the best spices available, and a great ras-el-hanout is the hallmark of a talented blender.

Harissa is a maghrebi hot chilli pepper paste, typically made with red pepper, serrano peppers, garlic, coriander seed, saffron and rose. It gives our bloody mariam our distinctive but gentle heat, as we have eschewed the traditional Worcester sauce/tabsco combination in our Mary.

Barberries are fruit grown on evergreen shrubs throughout North Africa and the Middle East. they are small, waxy and tart, a bit like a cranberry. We soak them in hot water to extract some of that acidity to temper the rich sweetness of date molasses.

Similarly, sumac is also a small red fruit, typically ground and made into a deep red powder to give Middle Eastern dishes an aromatic tartness.
